

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Matteo Carlo Alcano is a Post-doctoral Research Fellow in anthropology at the University of Milano – Bicocca (UNIMIB). Since 2008 he conducts research in Surabaya and South Bali (Indonesia) where he studies informal and illegal work, youth gangs, violence and masculine identities in the contexts of mobility. Currently he is undertaking fieldwork among construction workers and around the construction sites of East Java where he studies small scale mobility and circuits of human immobility, drug circulation, legal and illegal work and urban development.

Giuseppe Bolotta is a Clinical Psychologist and a 4th year PhD Candidate in anthropology at the Università di Milano – Bicocca (UNIMIB). He studies slum children in Bangkok (Thailand) and focuses on the interconnection between processes of self-definition, childhood suffering, social politics and religion. He co-founded the research group “Sciences de l’Enfance. Enfants des Sciences” (SEES, <http://sciences-enfances.org>). He was a lecturer in Forensic Psychopathology and Clinical Criminology at the Università Vita-Salute San Raffaele (Italy) and has worked with Psychologists without Borders.

Adele Esposito is a CNRS Research Fellow at AUSSER (Paris, France) and a lecturer at Leiden University (the Netherlands). Her research deals with the politics of heritage in Asia and, in particular, with the consequences of the UNESCO World Heritage Listing on Southeast Asian Cities.

Runa Lazzarino is a 4th year PhD Candidate at Università di Milano-Bicocca (UNIMIB). Her doctoral dissertation focuses on the processes and the practices connected to the construction of subjectivity in contexts of uprootedness, violence and psico-sociosomatic suffering. She has studied the experiences of the returnees of human trafficking during their liminal phase of recovery and reintegration in Ha Noi city and in the Viet Nam-China borderlands.

Amalia Rossi is a sociologist and an anthropologist and a Post-doctoral Research Fellow in anthropology at the Università of Milano – Bicocca (UNIMIB). Her research focuses on ethnicity and migrations, environmental conflicts and social and religious movements. She conducted fieldwork in Northern Thailand and in Northern Italy. She has co-edited a volume on social movements and one on environmental resources and social conflicts.

Antonia Soriente is an Italian linguist specialized in the languages of Borneo and a lecturer of Indonesian language and literature at the Department of Asian, African and Mediterranean studies at University of Napoli 'L'Orientale'. She has worked for the Jakarta Field Station of the Max Planck Institute for Evolutionary anthropology for ten years as a researcher and currently as a guest scholar. She is a research fellow at the Tokyo University of Foreign studies where she works with the ILCAA (Research Institute for Languages and Cultures of Asia and Africa), and a member of the editorial board of NUSA (Linguistic studies of languages in and around Indonesia). Her main research field is the description and the documentation of Kenyah and Punan languages of Borneo for which she has collected extensive documentation and also applied linguistics, bilingualism and child language acquisition. She also engages in research on contemporary Indonesian literature and culture.

Giacomo Tabacco is a PhD Candidate in anthropology at the University of Milano – Bicocca (UNIMIB). He has studied work, the access to work, unionism and personal development in Greater Jakarta and is currently conducting fieldwork among goldminers and gemstones seekers in Aceh (Indonesia).

Silvia Vignato is Associate Professor in anthropology at The Department of Human Science for education "Riccardo Massa", Università di Milano-Bicocca (UNIMIB). She teaches undergraduate and graduate students and supervises M.A. and Ph.D. thesis focused on Southeast Asia. Her research interest is on subjectivity as related to gender, evolving structures of families (with a focus on matrilocality) and unattached children in Indonesia (Aceh) and Malaysia. She examines marginal environments and considers issues of work and unemployment. Beside a monography about Indonesian Tamil migrants, other Sumatranese ethnic minorities and their levels of subjective integration into the State, she has published articles about Malaysian factory workers and manpower agents for migrants and about post-conflict and post-disaster young Acehenese people (children, teenagers, young parents). Since 2012 she is workpackage leader in SEATIDE (Southeast Asia: Trajectories of Inclusion, Dynamics of Exclusion), a 7th Frame Project of the European Commission.
